Order Remanding Case to State Court

Fidelity National Title Group, Inc., et al.,

[ECF No. 7]

Defendants

8 Nevada's 2008 housing crash kindled thousands of quiet-title lawsuits between the 9 homeowner associations that foreclosed on homes when the homeowner stopped paying 10 assessments, the banks that held the first-trust deeds on those homes, and the investors who 11 snapped those homes up at bargain-basement prices. Having consumed the state and federal 12 courts for more than half a decade now, those cases have mostly burned out. But a phoenix has 13 risen from their embers: the banks now sue the title insurers that issued policies when the 14 mortgages were originated for failing to defend them in those quiet-title suits and cover their 15 losses.

16 This removed action is one of those coverage suits. Though Bank of America filed it in 17 Nevada state court against forum and non-forum defendants, three of the title-insurer defendants 18 removed this case before any defendant, including themselves, had been served with process and 19 despite a forum defendant whose existence should have precluded removal. The propriety of this 20 practice—termed “snap removal”—is an issue that has divided the courts. The bank challenges 21 this practice in its motion for remand. Because I find that the removal here was improper, I grant 22 the bank’s motion for remand.

Discussion

Legal standard

3 28 U.S.C. § 1441(a) authorizes defendants to remove to federal court “any civil action 4 brought in a [s]tate court of which the [U.S. District Courts] have original jurisdiction . . . .” But 5 “[f]ederal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction.”<sup>1</sup> So defendants seeking removal jurisdiction
6 “always have the burden of establishing that removal is proper.”<sup>2</sup> This is a heavy burden to carry 7 because there is a “strong presumption against removal jurisdiction[,]” the removal statute is 8 “strictly construe[d] against removal jurisdiction[,]” and “[f]ederal jurisdiction must be rejected 9 if there is any doubt as to the right of removal in the first instance.”<sup>3</sup>

10 || II. Analysis

11 Fidelity National Title Insurance Company, Commonwealth Land Title Insurance
12 Company, and Chicago Title Insurance Company removed this case on diversity-jurisdiction 13 grounds.<sup>4</sup> Congress has created a limitation to diversity-based removal jurisdiction. 28 U.S.C.
14 § 1441(b)(2) provides that “[a] civil action otherwise removable solely on the basis of [diversity 15 jurisdiction] may not be removed if any of the parties in interest properly joined and served as 16 defendants is a citizen of the State in which such action is brought.” This limitation is called the 17 forum-defendant rule, which is a “procedural, or non-jurisdictional, rule.”<sup>5</sup>

18 In an effort to skirt the forum-defendant rule, Fidelity, Commonwealth, and Chicago Title 19 removed this case before any defendant had been served with process. The bank moves for

1 remand, arguing that the snap-removal practice violates the forum-defendant rule, which applies 2 here because four of the named defendants, Fidelity National Title Agency of Nevada, Inc.; 3 Chicago Title Agency of Nevada; Ticor Title of Nevada, Inc.; and Lawyers Title of Nevada, Inc.
 4 are Nevada citizens.<sup>6</sup> The removing defendants respond that removal before any defendant has 5 been served to defeat the forum-defendant rule is a permissible practice and, regardless, the 6 forum-defendant rule does not apply because the claims in this case have been fraudulently 7 misjoined to defeat removal, plus there is also federal-question jurisdiction because Freddie Mac, 8 not Bank of America, is the real party in interest.<sup>7</sup>

9           A.       The snap removal was improper under 28 U.S.C. § 1441(b)(2).

10           The removing defendants argue that snap removal is a permissible practice and a valid 11 means to avoid the forum-defendant rule. They point out that “every single” federal appellate 12 jurist to consider the issue has concluded that the plain language of § 1441(b)(2) is unambiguous
 13 and permits snap removal<sup>8</sup> but acknowledge that the Ninth Circuit has not yet done so.<sup>9</sup> 14 Recognizing that I—and all judges in this district (except for one) to have considered its 15 removals in dozens of nearly identical suits—have repeatedly held that this practice is 16 impermissible, the removing defendants urge me to reconsider and reverse my view.<sup>10</sup> The 17 bank, on the other hand, contends that the interpretation that the removing defendants and their 18 authorities offer cuts against the statute’s language and purpose of preserving the plaintiff’s

1 choice of a state forum when at least one defendant is a citizen of that state.<sup>11</sup> The bank adds 2 that each of the authorities that the removing defendants cite is materially distinguishable and 3 that nearly all judges in this district have overwhelmingly rebuffed the title insurers' snap-4 removal tactics.<sup>12</sup>

5 When interpreting federal statutes, “the starting point in discerning congressional intent is 6 the existing statutory text . . .”<sup>13</sup> “It is well established that when the statute’s language is plain, 7 the sole function of the courts—at least where the disposition required by the text is not absurd—
 8 is to enforce it according to its terms.”<sup>14</sup> Courts are required to “presume that the legislature says 9 in a statute what it means and means in a statute what it says there.”<sup>15</sup>

10 The appellate courts that have determined that § 1141(b)(2)’s “plain language allows 11 “snap removal” before any defendant has been served did so by focusing on the “properly joined 12 and served” phrase in the statute.<sup>16</sup> But not all courts agree with that interpretation. The 13 “[d]istrict courts are split as to whether snap removals are appropriate,” and “[t]here is ongoing 14 debate on whether there is a trend in favor or against” the practice.<sup>17</sup> Heavily cited in the

1 against-it camp is U.S. District Judge Woodlock’s decision in Gentile v. Biogen Idec, Inc., 2 concluding that “the plain language of section 1441(b) requires at least one defendant to have 3 been served before removal can be effected.”<sup>18</sup> Judge Woodlock reached that conclusion by 4 grammatically parsing the statute in its current and historical forms.<sup>19</sup> The statute now precludes 5 removal “if any of the parties in interest properly joined and served as defendants’ is a forum 6 defendant.”<sup>20</sup> “[Any[]] . . . means ‘one or more indiscriminately from all those of a kind[,]’”<sup>21</sup> 7 and “[i]nherent in the definition is some number of the ‘kind’ from which the ‘one or more’ can 8 be drawn.”<sup>22</sup> “Thus the lack of a party properly joined and served . . . means that . . . [a] basic 9 assumption embedded in the statute—that a party in interest had been served prior to removal—10 has not been met.”<sup>23</sup> This interpretation bars snap removals.

11       The removing defendants insist that Gentile should be rejected in favor of the circuit 12 rulings that approve of this tactic.<sup>24</sup> They also argue that the First Circuit’s 2015 decision in 13 Novak v. Bank of New York Mellon Trust<sup>25</sup> demonstrates that this 2013 decision by Judge 14 Woodlock, a judge within the First Circuit, was wrongly decided.<sup>26</sup> But Novak addressed only

 2 carefully considering the parties' authorities, I agree with the vast majority of the judges in this

 4 grammatical sense, it is the interpretation most true to other canons of construction, the statute's 5 purpose, and legislative intent.<sup>29</sup>

6 As Judge Woodlock reasoned, "[t]he removal power, and by extension the forum[-] 7 defendant rule, is founded on the basic premise behind diversity jurisdiction itself"— 8 "protect[ing] non-forum litigants from possible state[-]court bias in favor of forum-state 9 litigants."<sup>30</sup> But forum defendants do not suffer this bias and therefore do not need protection 10 from it. And the presence of a forum defendant presumably mitigates concerns of state-court 11 bias toward the plaintiff. So the forum-defendant "rule provides some measure of protection for 12 a plaintiff's choice of forum" in certain circumstances.<sup>31</sup> "[W]hen the overarching concerns

1 about local bias against the defendant” are absent, the rule allows “a plaintiff to move for a 2 remand of the case to the state court . . . .”<sup>32</sup>

3 Courts agree that § 1441(b)’s legislative history does not explain why “properly joined 4 and served” was added to the statute.<sup>33</sup> “Supreme Court jurisprudence at the time of the 1948 5 revision . . . suggests”<sup>34</sup> that this language was added to prevent the gamesmanship of a plaintiff 6 “blocking removal by joining as a defendant a resident party against whom it does not intend to 7 proceed, and whom it does not even serve.”<sup>35</sup> But with the advent of electronic dockets, 8 sophisticated, monied, or hyper-vigilant defendants are monitoring court filings and removing 9 before any defendant has been served, with the goal of eluding the forum-defendant rule.
 10 Congress would not have intended to prevent plaintiffs’ removal-defeating games by creating a 11 means for defendants to leapfrog over the forum-defendant rule.

12 The removal statute’s purpose is better fostered by precluding removal until at least one 13 defendant has been served. That way, “plaintiffs legitimately seeking to join a forum defendant 14 face the modest burden of serving that defendant before any others.”<sup>36</sup> A plaintiff who “serves a 15 non-forum defendant before serving a forum” one “has effectively chosen to waive an objection 16 to removal by a nimble non-forum defendant who thereafter removes the case” before it can be 17 served.<sup>37</sup> And the non-forum defendant can still argue that the forum defendant was fraudulently

1 joined.<sup>38</sup> This interpretation is faithful to the removal statute’s entire purpose and consistent 2 with its plain language, and I adopt it. Applying this interpretation, I conclude that removal of 3 this action was premature because it occurred before any defendant had been served.

4 B. There is no federal-question hook for jurisdiction.

5 The removing defendants argue that they had a separate and additional basis to remove: 6 “as a matter of judicially noticeable fact (which [the bank] is estopped from contorting), [the 7 plaintiff bank] is not the real party in interest to this controversy”—Freddie Mac is because it is 8 the true owner of the loan related to one of the several policies at issue, the Adamo Loan.<sup>39</sup> And 9 12 U.S.C. § 1452(f) provides that “all civil actions to which” Freddie Mac “is a party” will “be 10 deemed” to give rise to federal-question jurisdiction.<sup>40</sup> For this factual proposition, the removing 11 defendants cite the bank’s 2016 motion for summary judgment in the underlying state-court 12 litigation and the supporting affidavits, which detail Freddie Mac’s ownership of the loan.<sup>41</sup>

13 But it cannot be currently said that Freddie Mac “is a party” to this suit, so 12 U.S.C.
 14 § 1452(f) isn’t triggered by this action. This case was brought by Bank of America, and Freddie 15 Mac has not been named as a party in any pleading. And “the Supreme Court has rejected the 16 theory that the federal courts, when assessing their jurisdiction, should look beyond the pleadings 17 to discover unnamed real parties in interest.”<sup>42</sup> This is particularly true in a coverage case like

1 this one in which the plaintiff bank has pled that it “is the insured under the Adamo Policy” and 2 “the beneficiary of” the Adamo deed of trust.<sup>43</sup>

3 Even if I were to look beyond the pleadings, I would conclude that the removing 4 defendants have not demonstrated that the bank is not the real party in interest with respect to the 5 Adamo policy claim. The removing defendants argue that Freddie Mac’s ownership of the loan 6 makes it the insured under the policy.<sup>44</sup> But this argument ignores the broader definition of 7 “insured” under the relevant policy, which includes “the insured named in Schedule A” of that 8 policy.<sup>45</sup> The Schedule A named insured is “Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., its successors 9 and/or assigns,”<sup>46</sup> and Bank of America is such an assign, as evidenced by the Assignment of 10 Deed of Trust recorded on December 24, 2012.<sup>47</sup> So the plaintiff bank is an insured under the 11 Adamo policy regardless of any additional interest that Freddie Mac could potentially claim.
 12 Thus, in evaluating this remand motion, I decline to find that the plaintiff bank is not the real 13 party in interest such that I should look beyond the pleadings for potential other plaintiffs.

14 C. The fraudulent-misjoinder doctrine does not provide a basis for remand.

15 Finally, I consider the removing defendants’ argument that the way that the bank 16 packaged the claims into this single lawsuit was designed to evade removal. A common defense 17 to a remand motion is the doctrine of fraudulent joinder, which prohibits a plaintiff from 18 defeating federal subject-matter jurisdiction by joining a non-diverse party against whom no

1 viable claim can be pled.<sup>48</sup> As the Ninth Circuit has long recognized, a “fraudulent joinder” 2 occurs when the “plaintiff fails to state a cause of action against [a] defendant, and the failure is 3 obvious according to the settled rules of the state.”<sup>49</sup> And when that happens, the court can 4 disregard the citizenship of the fraudulently joined non-diverse defendant to find complete 5 diversity and deny remand.<sup>50</sup>

6       The removing defendants don’t argue fraudulent joinder but rather “fraudulent 7 misjoinder,” which is the “egregious” cobbling together of claims and parties that cannot 8 properly be joined under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 20 for the purpose of avoiding federal 9 jurisdiction.<sup>51</sup> The instant lawsuit seeks redress for the denial of nineteen different insurance 10 claims, and the removing defendants contend that, had the bank filed a separate lawsuit for each 11 claim, “ten of those [suits] would not have a local defendant to defeat removal.”<sup>52</sup> At the very 12 least, they argue, the court should sever and “retain jurisdiction over these fraudulently misjoined 13 claims.”<sup>53</sup>

14       But the fraudulent-misjoinder doctrine has not been recognized by the Ninth Circuit.
 15 Though a few district judges within the Ninth Circuit have adopted it, “[t]he doctrine has fared 16 poorly within the Ninth Circuit as a whole, . . . as the vast majority of district[-]court cases

1 within the Ninth Circuit have refused to apply” it.<sup>54</sup> The Eleventh Circuit, which was the first 2 federal circuit court to recognize the doctrine, remains the only one to have done so.<sup>55</sup> That 3 holding has been broadly criticized—most recently by the Fifth Circuit in Williams v. Homeland
 4 Insurance Company of New York, which “refused the invitation” to adopt the fraudulent-5 misjoinder doctrine.

6 Williams was a class action by healthcare providers against diverse and nondiverse 7 preferred-provider organizations and other diverse defendants. Defendant Homeland Insurance 8 Company removed the case to federal court, arguing that the class had “improperly and 9 egregiously misjoined” two types of claims—one against diverse defendants and the other 10 involving non-diverse defendant Med-Comp.<sup>56</sup> The class was partially successful on its motion 11 to remand: the district court essentially severed the case, remanded the claims against Med-12 Comp to state court, but disregarded Med-Comp’s citizenship as to the rest of the case and 13 retained jurisdiction over the remaining claims.<sup>57</sup>

14 On appeal, the Fifth Circuit panel reversed, expressly rejecting the fraudulent-misjoinder 15 theory. “First and most importantly,” it reasoned, the removal statute<sup>58</sup> “does not provide a 16 textual basis for expanding federal jurisdiction to include fraudulent misjoinder, nor is there any

1 so.”<sup>59</sup> “The severance mechanism for omitting a non-diverse defendant also upends our rules on 2 removal . . . by effectively allowing a federal district court to engage in significant procedural 3 wrangling to create jurisdiction.”<sup>60</sup> This would run afoul of the “well-known rule that federal 4 courts are courts of limited jurisdiction” and “invite district courts to evaluate procedural 5 questions regarding misjoinder that are better resolved in state courts prior to removal”—“all 6 without a clear statutory hook.”<sup>61</sup> The panel concluded that “[d]eclining to adopt the fraudulent 7 misjoinder doctrine as a basis for exercising diversity jurisdiction and holding that misjoinder 8 issues should be addressed in state court prior to removal also brings greater clarity to the line 9 between removable and non-removable cases.”<sup>62</sup>

10 I find the Williams reasoning persuasive, adopt it here, and decline the invitation to create 11 subject-matter jurisdiction by severing claims. If claims are truly misjoined, a removing 12 defendant could—and should—move to sever the claims in state court and then remove.<sup>63</sup> Such 13 a practice is more faithful to 28 U.S.C. § 1441(b)(2) and the Ninth Circuit’s long recognition that 14 it must be “strictly construe[d] . . . against removal jurisdiction” with “any doubt as to the right
